Presented by: Matt Schwartz, California Housing Partnership

Three California agencies (CPUC, CEC and CSD) regulate energy retrofit programs spending more than $500 million a year on increasing the energy efficiency of existing low income housing yet it is virtually impossible for owners of low income housing properties to access many of these funds. Come join a growing coalition of nonprofit housing organizations and energy retrofit advocates to find out about efforts underway to improve this situation. Discussion will be led by Matt Schwartz from the California Housing Partnership. Other discussants will include Wayne Waite from HUD's Office of Sustainable Housing and Communities, who will present the latest information on HUD's growing partnership with the federal Department Of Energy and the implications for California programs, Dan Adams, from the SF Mayor's Office of Housing, who will describe the innovative retrofit program under development by San Francisco, Berkeley and Oakland, representatives from Enterprise and LIIF, who will give an update on the status of their Green Retrofit Loan Fund, Heather Larson from StopWaste.Org will describe multifamily standards development within Energy Upgrade California.
